Seller confidence dips as market continues to rebalance

74% of active buyers in the UK were confident that they would purchase a property within the next 3 months

63% of sellers in the UK were confident that they would sell their property within the next 3 months

42% of properties were Sold Subject to Contract (SSTC) within 30 days of first being advertised for sale, compared with 53% in November 2021

Subtle rebalancing as return to pre-Covid market continues

November's data illustrates the slowdown in the housing market which many anticipated. Continuing upheaval, challenges in the macro-economic climate and the chatter around mortgage rates – some fixed rates remain at much higher levels than we've become used to, despite a gentle, downwards trajectory – are bound to affect the confidence of average property-seeking consumers.

There are also seasonal factors to consider. Pre-pandemic, we'd expect the market to slow down at this time of year with thoughts turning towards the festive period rather than house hunting, and properties not looking their best for marketing purposes. As the market continues to rebalance and returns to one more akin to a pre-Covid market, seasonal factors will increasingly come into play.

While there are signs that the market is resetting, it's doing so in a reassuringly measured way, rather than moving drastically. Indeed, 74% of buyers in November remained confident that they'd purchase a property within the next three months, which is consistent with October's data. However, when it came to seller confidence, there was a noticeable dip. Our data shows that 63% of sellers were confident they'd sell their home within the next three months in November, compared with 82% the previous month. If we look at the data on a regional basis, every area saw a drop in seller confidence, with the largest fall in the South East (58% in November compared with 83% in October), perhaps reflecting the added challenges of getting a mortgage to afford relatively higher-priced properties. However, our data does not show that people are no longer confident about selling, just that they may be less confident about selling as quickly as they might have been even a month ago. This is reflected in our data which shows confidence in the medium-term has strengthened with 27% of sellers confident they'd sell their properties within the next six months, an increase when compared to October (13%).

While it may be taking longer to find a buyer compared with a year ago, 42% of properties were still SSTC within 30 days of first being listed in November. While this figure is down on 53% in November 2021, when you consider that there was comparatively less stock on the market then (27% less than November 2022), today's market is proving to be pretty resilient, pointing towards a rebalancing, rather than a severe correction.

With the fallout from the mini-Budget, combined with seasonal factors, it's unsurprising that consumers feel less confident in the short term. Uncertainty around mortgage pricing and continued rising interest rates are bound to have a knock-on effect on affordability. But it doesn't necessarily follow that these will translate into longer-term concerns; people move for different reasons and that isn't going to change, even if market conditions are tougher.

As the market continues to rebalance, those serious about selling in the meantime must remember the value of an experienced local agent and the importance of realistically pricing their home. This will ensure they market their property at the right price initially, with the transaction steered through to successful completion, even if it does take a little longer.

Seller Sentiment - how confident were sellers in November 2022?

November 2022 Headlines

From our sample of sellers surveyed, UK average rates of confidence over the last month were as follows:

- 63% of sellers were confident that they would sell their property within the next 3 months, a decrease when compared to October 2022 (82%)
- 27% of sellers were confident that they would sell their properties within the next 6 months, an increase when compared to October 2022 (13%)
- 4% of sellers were confident that they would sell their home within the next 9 months, a slight increase when compared to October 2022 (2%)
- 6% of sellers were confident that they would sell their home within the next 12 months, a slight increase when compared to October 2022 (3%)

Mover attitudes towards mortgage availability in November 2022

November 2022 headlines:

- As a UK average, in November 2022 only 4% of movers were concerned (either very worried or slightly concerned) about securing a mortgage to fund the purchase of their next property, a slight decrease when compared to October 2022 (5%).
- Greater London and the North West jointly had the highest number of respondents who already had their mortgage Agreement In Principle in place prior to starting their search for a property (45%). The South West had the lowest number of respondents who already had a mortgage Agreement In Principle in place before starting their property search (31%).
- As a UK average, 24% of movers hadn't considered applying for a mortgage before starting their property search, with buyers in Greater London the least likely to have considered applying for a mortgage before starting their search for a property (30%).
- As a UK average, 33% of buyers surveyed said that they didn't need a mortgage in order to purchase a property. Greater London had the lowest number of respondents who indicated that they wouldn't require a mortgage to purchase a property (19%).
 Scotland had the highest number of respondents who indicated that they didn't need a mortgage to buy their next home (44%).

The OnTheMarket Property Sentiment Index provides insights in terms of how confident movers across the UK feel about securing a mortgage in order to fund the purchase of their next property. Since increased affordability assessments were introduced by lenders in 2014 as part of the Mortgage Market Review, the ability to both successfully secure a mortgage and borrow enough to fund a property purchase are key factors which can have a significant impact on home mover sentiment.

Respondents to the OnTheMarket survey are asked to indicate how they feel about raising the necessary funds to purchase their next property by choosing from the following options:

- I'm very worried
- I'm slightly concerned
- I'm sure it will be fine
- I have a mortgage Agreement in Principle already
- I don't need a mortgage to buy a property
- I've not thought about it
